Good Common Sense

The great 17th century mathematician and philosopher Blaise Pascal used a simple exercise in logic to show that it just makes good common sense to follow God, using what has come to be known as Pascal's Wager.

In short, Pascal argues, if God exists and we follow and obey Him, we have an eternal reward in heaven awaiting. If, however, we follow God and it turns out that he does not exist, then we still will have had a virtuous life.

On the other side of the coin, if we have refused to follow God and He does not in fact exist – we have lost or gained nothing in the end. But, and this is the key point, if we have chosen not to follow and God is indeed real, then we have wagered and lost everything for all eternity, our very souls forever separated from God in torment.

The bottom line is that following God and living for Him just makes good common sense.
